LOGLINE

In the Sonoran Desert, the towering saguaro cactus is life itself—feeding doves, sheltering owls, sustaining coyotes, and shaping a world of astonishing diversity.

SYNOPSIS

In the Sonoran Desert, survival revolves around one towering giant—the saguaro cactus. White-winged doves migrate to its blossoms, bats feed on its flowers, and woodpeckers carve homes into its arms. By day, quail, javelinas, coyotes, and hummingbirds animate the desert floor; by night, owls, packrats, and scorpions take the stage. From tortoises and roadrunners to rattlesnakes and Gila monsters, all depend directly or indirectly on the saguaro. But as climate change threatens the saguaro's survival, the fate of the desert hangs in the balance.

TAGLINE: One cactus. A thousand lives. The desert's fate hangs in balance.

Keystones: Nature's Most Important Species

The film is part of a nature series that explores the plants and animals that hold ecosystems together. Season 1 begins with Dog Wars - Life and Death in a Prairie Dog Town, where underground burrows, complex social bonds, and relentless predators key the prairie dog's role as both prey and provider. Giants of the Sonoran centers around the iconic saguaro cactus, a desert giant that offers food, shelter, and nesting sites to birds, mammals, and reptiles. In Bison - Feel the Thunder, America's national mammal endures blizzards, predators, and competitors, maintaining the fragile grasslands for birds, insects, and countless others.

Together, these stories highlight nature's intricate balance—and hint at what is lost when keystone species vanish. Season 2 promises more keystone tales to come.
