- In Dushanbe, Osh, and Khorog, meals will be provided by local guesthouses or restaurants.
- For all other locations along the route, our guide will personally prepare the meals for our group.

This approach helps minimize the risk of food poisoning, which can be common in remote areas of the Pamir. By taking control of food preparation, we can maintain higher hygiene standards and carefully select ingredients.

Frequently Asked Questions

A: The ideal time for our Pamir Highway expedition is from mid-June to mid-September. During these months, the weather is most favourable, and mountain passes are typically clear of snow.

Q: How physically demanding is this expedition?

A: While our UAZ expedition vehicle does most of the hard work, you should be in reasonably good health. We'll reach altitudes up to 4,655m, so some basic fitness is recommended. Most activities involve light walking, but the high altitude can make this more challenging.

Q: What about altitude sickness?

A: Altitude sickness can affect anyone, regardless of fitness. Our itinerary is designed to allow for gradual acclimatization. Stay hydrated and inform your guide if you feel unwell. Consider consulting your doctor about altitude medication before the trip.

Q: What type of accommodation can I expect?

A: We offer a mix of authentic local experiences. You'll stay in yurt camps and basic guesthouses. Facilities are often simple, reflecting the remote nature of the region. Expect shared rooms and basic sanitation facilities in some locations.

Q: What's the food like on this expedition?

A: You'll experience a mix of local cuisine and carefully prepared meals by your guide. Let us know if you have any food restrictions or allergies.

Q: Do I need a visa?

A: You may need visas for both Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan depending on your nationality. You'll also need a GBAO permit for the Gorno-Badakhshan region. We can assist with visa information and GBAO, but please check the latest requirements for your nationality.

Q: What should I pack?

A: Pack for varying weather conditions. Bring warm layers, a good jacket, comfortable walking shoes, a hat, sunglasses, and sunscreen. Don't forget any personal medications, and a camera for those stunning mountain views!

Q: Is Wi-Fi available during the expedition?

A: Wi-Fi is very limited in the Pamir region. Some guesthouses in larger towns may offer basic internet, but it's best to prepare for limited connectivity during most of the expedition.

Q: How many people are in an expedition group?

A: Our UAZ expedition vehicle comfortably seats 6 travellers plus your guide/driver. We keep our groups small to ensure a more personal experience and to minimize our impact on the local communities we visit.

Q: Is it safe to travel in this region?

A: While the Pamir Highway passes through remote areas, it's generally safe for travellers. As your guide, I'm experienced with the route and local customs. However, as with all travel, it's important to exercise common sense and follow local advice.

Q: How does this expedition benefit local communities?

A: At Borderless Expeditions, we're committed to responsible tourism. We work directly with local communities, ensuring that your visit contributes positively to the region. Your expedition helps support local economies and preserves traditional ways of life in the Pamir.
