Biography

Elena is a contemporary art curator and project manager based in Paris and a resident curator at POUCH cultural center in Paris, specializing in the Mediterranean region's natural and cultural relationships. Her work focuses on the creative process through collaborative projects with artists, scientists, and the public. Elena aims to create spaces for co-creation and new works, analyzing the factors influencing creativity.

Elena holds a master's degree in Art History and Cultural Studies from Sorbonne University and the Louvre School, and she is pursuing a doctorate at the University of Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne. Her research and curatorial practice focus on multidisciplinary projects and contemporary art, with an emphasis on artists' inquiries.

With over 10 years of experience, Elena has organized art residencies in Spain, France, Italy, Cyprus and Malta, collaborating with international institutions. Her recent projects include partnerships with scientific labs at the University of Valencia and the EU under the Creative Europe program, integrating diverse disciplines into the artistic process. Elena has also curated exhibitions in various European cities featuring sculpture, painting, performance, and video.

Elena initiated EU and UN-supported projects like MARITIMA 01 and MARLANDS, focusing on the ecological and cultural dimensions of Mediterranean Islands, promoting collaboration among artists, scientists, and local communities. Her approach emphasizes sustainability, creativity, and new methods of collaboration in the arts.
