

Yellow in Nature

Yaa loved collecting flowers from nature. One sunny morning, she picked up her basket and headed down a winding garden path. Everywhere she looked, beautiful yellow flowers were blooming. Some were tall and reached toward the sky, while others peeked out from the grass below.

As she continued her walk, butterflies fluttered from flower to flower and bees buzzed softly nearby. Yaa carefully gathered a few blossoms for her bouquet and stopped to admire all the different shapes and petals she had discovered.

Before heading home, she sat beneath a shady tree and spread out the flowers she had collected. Some were large, some were small, and each one was unique in its own way.

“Wow,” Yaa said. “There are so many beautiful yellow flowers in nature!”
