

Christine Knize

My orchids are not just flowers—they are quiet witnesses.
Their scale is intentional: a whisper made large, a meditation in bloom.
In painting them, I slow time. I invite stillness in a world that rarely stops.
Each petal holds a tension between fragility and resilience.
They speak to the vanishing—of habitats, of silence, of tenderness.
But they also speak to survival.
In their curves and shadows, I find echoes of femininity, memory, and transformation.
The orchid becomes a mirror: of beauty, of vulnerability, of strength we forget we carry.
If they relate to contemporary issues, it is because they insist on presence.
And presence, in these times, is a radical act.

Legacy

"Thirty Years of Light and Scale"

Before the studio, there was the architecture. For three decades, Christine Knize was a hidden master within the private estates of South Florida. From the historic restoration of the Biltmore Hotel to site-specific installations for the world's most private collections—including Oprah and the Bob Marley family—Knize mastered the physics of monumental space. This legacy of architectural mastery is the foundation of the Orchidelirium series: a transition from the wall to the canvas, where the scale remains grand, but the focus becomes singular.
