Scioto Country Club: Where legends begin

Columbus, Ohio

Difficulty: 3/5

This is the most old-school venue on this list, but don't let that fool you. Scioto hosted the third edition of the Ryder Cup back in 1931 and helped shape the future of American golf. The Golden Bear himself learned the game here, and the Donald Ross design — restored to his original specifications in 2021 — remains a masterclass in subtle strategy.

Give Scioto a go and you'll see how understated can still mean demanding. The par-5 8th winds around a stream toward a well-defended green, while the uphill 9th par-3 is all about holding your nerve.

It's not the longest or flashiest track, but it's one of the most quietly brilliant — and a bona fide piece of Ryder Cup history.

Format: Better ball

- Each player plays their own ball throughout the round. After each hole, only the best score from the team is recorded and counts as the score for the team on that hole.

Holes: Front 9

Men's Tee: 6,490 yards

Women's Tee: 5070 yards

Putting: Auto- Fixed

Wind: Calm

Fairway/Green firmness: Medium

Green Stimp: 10

Marcella Club: The Big Cat prowls the high country

Park City, Utah

Difficulty: 2/5

Tiger's highly anticipated mountain course stretches along Jordanelle Ridge with sweeping views of the Uinta Mountains, Deer Valley ski runs, and the Jordanelle Reservoir. Still under construction, the par-72 layout is set to top 8,000 yards from the tips, with holes flowing between exposed ridgelines and sheltered valleys.

In VG3, you'll get the full panorama — ridge-top tee shots, tightly mown surrounds that demand creativity, and elevation shifts that make club selection interesting. Go for the back tees if you want to see just how far "high country" golf can go.
