What Are Stem Cells?

Stem cells are part of your body's natural repair system, unlike other cells, they can transform into cartilage, tendons or nerves.

When injected into areas of injury or degeneration like (knees, shoulder, back or neck) they can:

- Reduce inflammation
- Stimulate tissue repair
- Improve functional movement
- Slow or revert joint damage

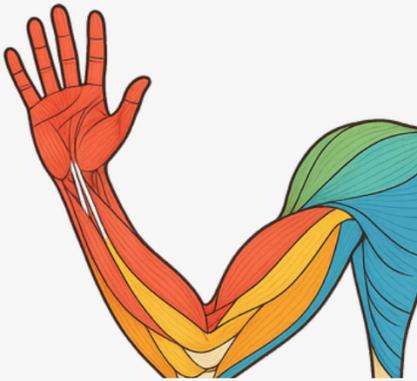

Regenerative Medicine and Musculoskeletal Trauma Therapy

Regenerative medicine is a branch of medical science focused on repairing or regenerating damaged tissue through the use of biological cells.

Some of the leading causes of disability, temporary or permanent damage to the musculoskeletal system are traumatic injuries, overuse, repetitive strain or age related changes.

Mesenchymal stem cells (MSCs) help regenerate tissue, reduce inflammation, and support immune balance, offering non-surgical solutions for joint and tissue damage.

Conditions Treated

Our therapies are designed for individuals struggling with:

- Knee pain (arthritis, torn meniscus, cartilage degeneration)
- Shoulder pain (rotator cuff tears, stiffness, inflammation))
- Back and Neck pain (herniated discs, sciatica, chronic pain)

Stem Cell Therapy for Joint Relief

Why direct joint injections?

Targeted Stem Cell injections are often more effective than IV treatments for orthopedic issues.

→ Doses typically range from 50-150 million cells depending on your needs.

Benefits of targeted therapy:

Pain Relief

Helps reduce chronic joint pain at the source

Tissue Repair

Supports natural healing and regeneration
