

Individualization and Appropriateness

“Everything related to a child’s education must be highly individualized and tailored to the child’s mental, emotional, and social condition. Otherwise, the educational process will not take hold at all, as each child is a unique case.

Many of the methods, strategies, and even information used in a child’s products suffer from the major problem of not considering the child’s unique developmental characteristics.

We may blame the child, when the issue lies with us, in that we did not account for the matter of appropriateness—whether in terms of timing, place, or the child’s individuality.”
