Research projects

- 2021-present Ernest Manheim Public Opinion Lab

- History of experience: changes on public opinion, actors' media interaction, and groups publicity

It debates the changes in the concept of public opinion converge on populism groups' publicity spheres in Latin America. It investigates the different ways actors interact with media. It explores new professional practices paralleling old ones, from pamphlet drawings to computer-mediated "journeys". Experience is understood as a way of organizing simple schemas facing the life-world (Lebenswelt). It analyzes evidence of frames of relevance in advertising on the new media, covering the consumption of populism by shared links. Theoretically, it presents the legacy of Ernest Manheim to the Latin academic community and debates on Alfred Schutz and Erving Goffman.

2020-2022 Institute of Language Studies, Universidade de Campinas

- Framing groups figurations: relevances by media ethnography and natural language processing

It publicizes an open-source software for the analysis of WhatsApp groups and to dimension the possible presence of bots and authoritarian discourse content, as well as any thematic structure, as a quantitative index, without losing my domain: media ethnography. The project contextualizes the use of new methods for research in digital humanities, with a particular focus on details, allowing researchers to find relevant points for ethnographic studies. It dialogues with Computational Linguistics in natural language processing techniques in quantitative investigations on the contents disseminated in groups, allowing an analysis of news and adherence to specific topics. It also contextualizes Erving Goffman's face-to-face representation and figuration concepts, developing features to detect vulnerabilities and ritual of conversational frames via machinations and laminations. It also ponders on Ernest Manheim's concepts of group linkages in the formation of publicity experience and changes in public opinion. The project is divided into three parts: i) ethnography in far-right and left-wing WhatsApp groups in Brazil; ii) building Qualichat in Python and (see: qualichat.com) and iii) testing Qualichat's functionalities in quali-quantitative studies. The project is by funding American Political Science Association since 2020. Download the software package in Python: <https://pypi.org/project/qualichat>.
