The Southern Gerontological Society and the University of Alabama at Birmingham invite you to a screening of the award-winning documentary, Remember Me: Dementia in the African American Community. Our evening will begin with refreshments and networking from 4:30 PM - 5:30 PM. Following the screening, we will host a discussion with a panel of experts. This is a free event but you are required to register.

About the Documentary: More than 55 million people worldwide have dementia and African Americans are disproportionately diagnosed compared to their white counterparts. This award-winning documentary, from filmmaker C. Nathaniel Brown, examines the disparities through personal stories from dementia patients, caregivers who care for their loved ones, and dementia experts who discuss everything from the alarming statistics to African Americans' mistrust of the medical community to resources to reverse the current trends.
