- 2. Identify 2 or more professionals in your field to interview about how artificial intelligence (AI) is influencing their work and the broader profession. Your interviewees might include current practitioners, faculty members, supervisors, or leaders who can speak to how AI is being used—or not used—in their work. These people should be in the field that you hope to soon enter after graduation to best prepare you to navigate AI in your future work.

- 3. Develop 5-7 thoughtful, open-ended interview questions that will guide your conversations and encourage meaningful responses. Your questions should explore how AI is currently being used, how professionals perceive its benefits and challenges, and what changes or opportunities it is creating within the field. Aim for questions that invite stories, examples, or personal reflections rather than simple yes-or-no answers. Consider including at least one question about the future—how they see AI continuing to shape the field and what skills or mindsets will be most important for emerging professionals.
