

Laraleigh Windom is a Licensed Practical Nurse, clinical leader, and devoted mother who has learned advocacy not just from textbooks or professional roles — but from lived experience. As the parent of a child with complex medical and behavioral needs, she has spent years navigating healthcare systems, insurance barriers, school challenges, and difficult clinical decisions.

What began as simply trying to help her own child has grown into a deep commitment to helping other families find their voice. Laraleigh brings both professional expertise and personal understanding to the table, blending clinical knowledge with compassion, organization, and persistence.

She is passionate about equipping parents with practical tools, clear information, and the confidence to advocate effectively — especially when systems feel overwhelming or unresponsive. Her goal is simple: to help families feel less alone and more empowered in the fight for their children's well-being.
