

Tyosha Mobley – Advocate, Educator, and Neurodivergent Ally

Tyosha Mobley is a proud mom of two thriving neurodivergent boys, soon to be young men, who inspire her every day with their growth, resilience, and unique perspectives. Her journey as a mother has given her a deep, firsthand understanding of the joys and challenges faced by neurodivergent individuals and their families, fueling her passion for advocacy and meaningful change.

Professionally, Tyosha has extensive experience in project management, educational support, and organizational leadership. Through her work with AuSome Advocacy and its subsidiary AuSome Answers, she combines her professional skills with her personal insight to guide families, students, and educators through complex educational and community systems. She specializes in IEP and 504 plan support, resource navigation, and advocacy coaching, helping families confidently advocate for their children's needs while fostering collaboration with schools and service providers.

Ty is committed to being an ongoing force for impact, growth, and equity in the neurodivergent community. She believes that advocacy is not just about support, but about creating sustainable change—ensuring that every individual has access to opportunities to thrive through Grace, Grit, and the ability to Advocate.
