

About our lecturer, Alexandre Fischer, CS

Practicing law in France and the United States for several years informed Alexandre's practice of Christian Science. The law was not just his job, he says, it was his passion. To Alexandre, being a good lawyer meant exercising the ability to think precisely and feeling a desire to help others get out of trouble.

During his years as a lawyer, his interest in Christian Science grew. At first, he was impressed by its remarkable healings and resolutions, but as he dug deeper, he found a profound spirituality. He used to believe that religion and spirituality meant accepting a system of beliefs and letting go of discernment and critical thinking. But the more he studied and practiced this spirituality, the more he found that one's relationship with God requires critical thinking to understand spiritual concepts. These concepts can in turn be applied to one's life to bring healing.

Gradually, he gave up his law practice to become a full-time Christian Science practitioner. Alexandre still works to help others "get out of trouble," that is, to overcome a sense of limitation and to find freedom.

Alexandre discovered that Christian Science is not just about feeling better or fixing problems. It's about being willing to challenge one's world view as entirely molecule-based and soulless, to be open to see the world as spiritually-based, and experience how this change in perspective brings inner peace and healing. Christian Science helps us understand our relationship with God, infinite good, more clearly. Its teachings help us see Christ Jesus' message in a non-dogmatic way, bringing healing, harmony and freedom to our life.

Through healing and lecturing, Alexandre works to enable others to find this same freedom.
