

Stacey: Were there any communist attacks on the church in 1930s that you remember or?

Olga: Not on the church but they knew he was a faithful Catholic, like my father, and they were coming down to the Donovan and they were throwing stones at everybody's windows and I remember my mother and I hiding in the bedroom because they were throwing and breaking our brand new windows you know and calling my father names...we were attacked, you know. We didn't have a phone to call police, no one had a phone.

Stacey: And other members in the parish were also attacked?

Olga: I can't remember that but they were attacking the people in the Donovan.

Stacey: Ok. Only if you were Catholic?

Olga: They picked on us. Don't ask me why!

Stacey: Ok.

Olga: My father maybe got into a shemozzle with them or an argument maybe at work.

Stacey: Because he was pretty high profile.

Olga: He was high profile.

Stacey: Ok. So he was a target I guess.

Olga: Mmm hmm.

Stacey: What kinds of things were they calling him? Do you remember?

Olga: No I couldn't remember that.

Stacey: Just very insulting things?

Olga: Mmm hmm.
