APPLES!

Grafting

When branches of two different trees touch each other, merge, and continue to grow, they have formed a natural graft. The two fused trees can share nutrients, minerals, and other necessities. Seeing this, early people learned to use grafting in agriculture as long ago as 500 BCE. Most woody plants can be grafted or budded, but the tion of several. When a third plant is added between two others to become a trunk it is called an interstem. Budding is another method of grafting in which the scion is a single bud rather than a piece of stem or twig. Budding forms a stronger union, is faster and, often, more successful, than any other grafting technique. Because only a single bud processes are labor intensive and require skill. The technique is used only used by orchardists, horticulturalists, or pomologists when it will provide a marked advantage over more convenient propagation techniques. Grafting is a form of cloning. A graft is performed when a scion is inserted into the lower portion of a tree. The scion becomes the top of the plant and the understock becomes the root system or part of the trunk. Although grafting usually refers to joining only two plants, it may be a combina-is inserted, it is possible to produce several new plants even when scion wood of a new variety is scarce. Grafting is done in the spring using a sharp knife. Fresh, green cambium cells need to be exposed on both the scion and rootstock for the graft to be successful. Both the rootstock and the scion are cut in tongue and groove fashion so that they interlock. This allows the cambium cells to contact each other on at least two points. Grafted trees have consistent and

Ethyl Alcohol made from Apples

While no form of alcohol is good for us (isopropyl alcohol is used for sterilization and methyl alcohol is used for dissolving other substances), humans have a long history of ingesting ethyl alcohol as a recreational drug. Ethyl alcohol alters mood and behavior. Brewers and distillers usually make it from grains or other pieces of plant matter with high sugar contents. The human liver usually can filter ethyl alcohol from the body, but it is toxic when consumed faster than the liver can metabolize it. Like methyl alcohol, ethyl alcohol can be used as an industrial solvent and as a fuel additive. Ethyl alcohol is naturally produced when airborne yeast cells fall into apple juice. These microscopic fungi feed on the fruit sugars within the juice. With a ready supply of nutrients, the yeast population grows, and even more ethyl alcohol is produced. When all the sugar is consumed, the yeast become dormant, and the alcohol concentration in the, now, "hard" cider is about 5 percent. Hard cider, apple wine, apple brandy, and applejack are all apple-based beverages which contain ethyl alcohol. They differ in the methods used to arrive at their alcohol percentages.

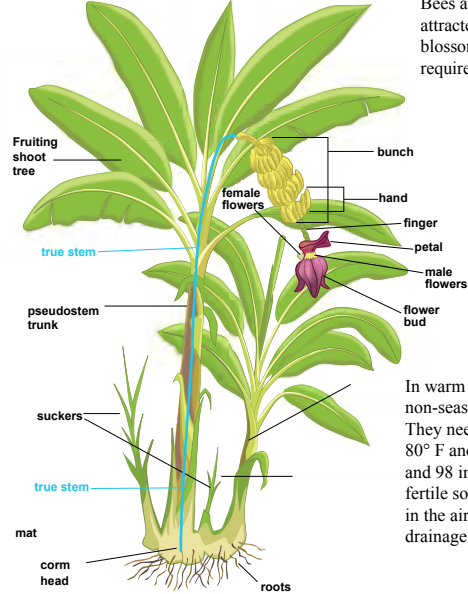

Hard apple cider starts with freshly pressed, pasteurized apple juice or sweet cider. Yeast, and sometimes sugar, are added to the juice, and the container is sealed. As the container sits, the yeasts consume the added sugar and/or the naturally occurring sugar in the apple juice and give off carbon dioxide as a part of their respiration process. Once the sugar is gone, the yeast can no longer make energy, so they go dormant. This fermentation process results in an elevated alcohol content of 3-5%. If the hard cider is re-fermented with more sugar, or infused with carbon dioxide, it will be effervescent (carbonated).

Diagram of banana palm

Bees and hummingbirds are attracted to the nectar of banana blossoms, but bananas do not require pollination to produce fruit.

Wild species of bananas resemble cultivated bananas, except that they can reproduce through both seeds and suckers. Modern bananas have been bred to be sterile. Cultivated bananas contain black specks (the former seeds), which will not germinate.

In warm climates, banana plants are non-seasonal and fruit year-round. They need average temperatures of 80° F and yearly rainfall between 78 and 98 inches. They need rich, dark, fertile soils with steady moisture in the air and ground and good drainage.

Full set of very custom cartoon illustrations we did in watercolor styling for usage in a PowerPoint presentation and a book.

Cover illustrations we did for an online digital audio magazine. Designed to work across phone, tablet, and desktop screen sizes and shapes.

From a series of cartoons we custom designed for a company that coaches better business teamwork.

Tell CartoonBob some basics about your business, and we'd be glad to suggest custom cartoons for your business.

Modern Sales People Need To Jump Plenty Of Hurdles, Just To Sell.

MARKETERS think sales people need all of the beautiful decks, videos and brochures they produce.
ACCOUNTANTS think they need to hurry up and hit their targets and stop spending so much money.
HR think they need ongoing training, some dedicated e-learning time and an offsite for motivation.
IT think they require a highly detailed CRM system so they can report on every moment in their day.
SALES MANAGERS think they need regular phone calls, emails and face time to talk about numbers.
ACCOUNT MANAGERS want Sales people to make everything simple so their job is nice and easy.
AND THE CUSTOMER just wants to know how the product or service will help solve their problem.

We'll get to know your product or service with repeat work.

Chances are we've already done work in your field.

We offer a very wide range of HUMAN talents and experience.

We get regular requests to 'FIX' work way off target done by the AI robots.

We can't hire an IN-HOUSE GRAPHIC DESIGNER. That's ridiculous!

I'd like some CHARTS and GRAPHS and other WEB CONTENT that doesn't put people to sleep.*

Our CATALOG and YEARBOOK can sure use some creativity.*

It would be nice to get some very custom cartoons to our PROMO AND BRANDING MATERIALS.*

How about our own custom HAPPY BIRTHDAY CARD, with us drawn as a rodeo, basketball or football team?*

Yeah. CARICATURES of all of us for our website.*

We could even explain and clearly show OUR SERVICES in a COMIC STRIP.*

We don't only work with large companies with boardrooms. We also work energetically with smaller and even startup companies.
