Phyllis hoped that the employees wouldn't retire before making their 401K choices.

Each cartoon was carefully crafted, with heavy client participation, to illustrate a different unique selling point that they offer.

If you can describe and get a graphic you need using A.I.... then more power to you.

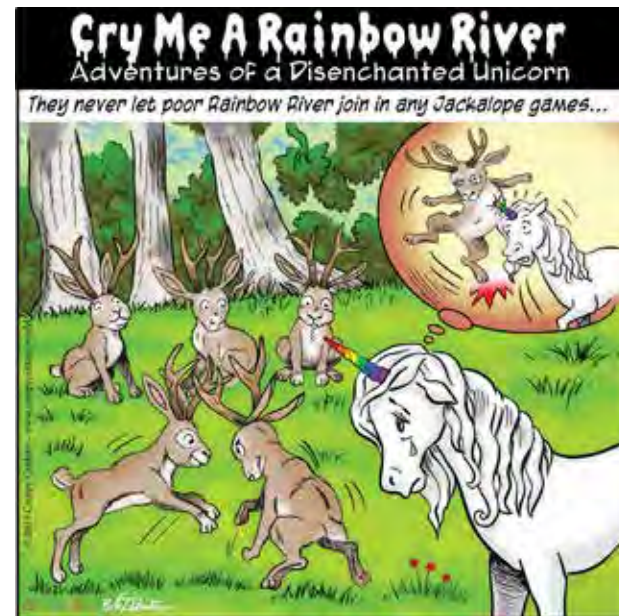

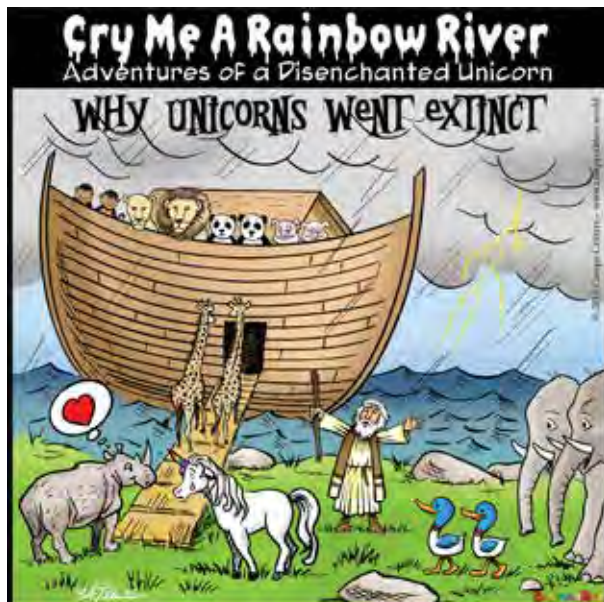

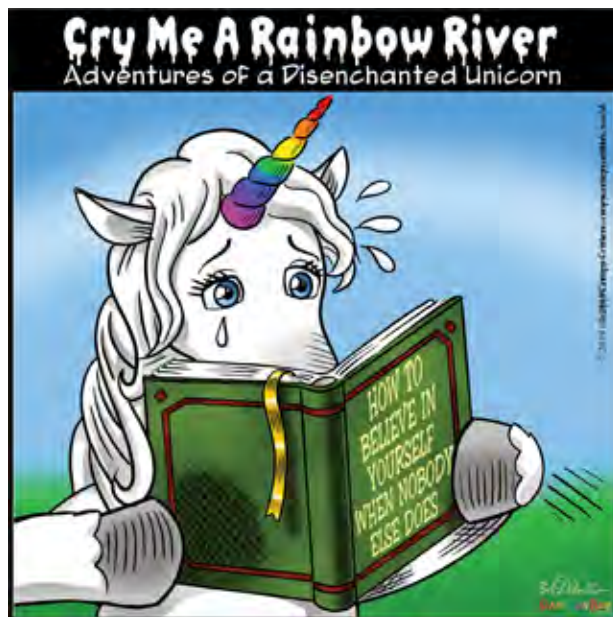

Much the same way the home computer and desktop publishing carved a new landscape for many graphics companies... e.g. typesetters, photo engravers, etc.... the newer kid on the graphics block is the ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE ARTIST.

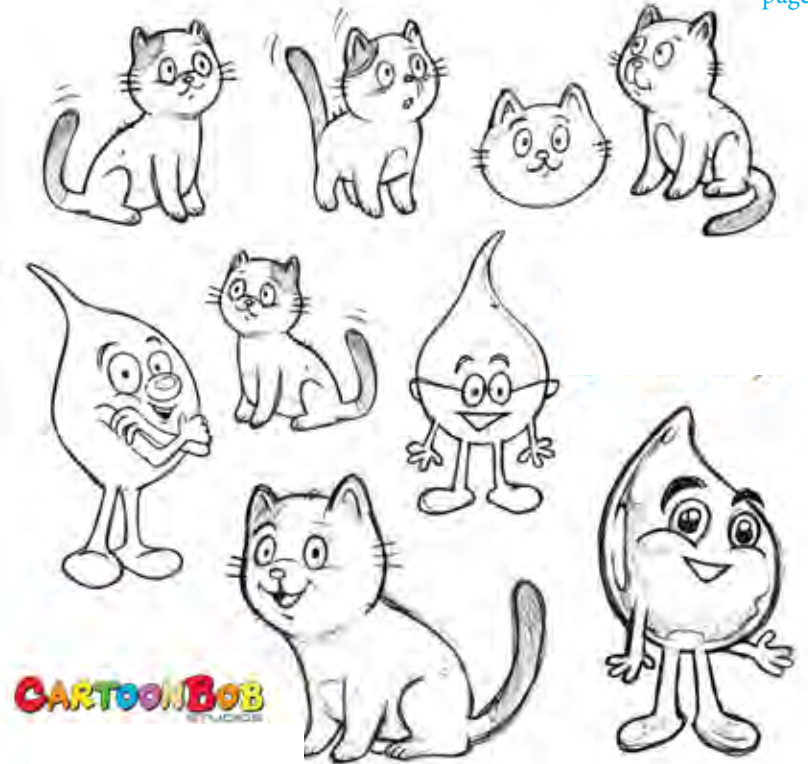

We actually use A.I. to research images that we look at to base an illustration on. It used to be just look through the stock photo sources online, but A.I. has put some of them out to pasture. (e.g. if we needed to draw a TigerMoth plane... we'd need to see one to draw it correctly. Same for many other things.

We CREATE beyond the limits of A.I.

There are more than just NUANCES that all contribute to a powerful illustration or cartoon. Facial expressions, body language, composition, and much more.

Like supporting actors... dogs, kittens, water droplets, panthers... all mascots or parts of finished larger illustrations.

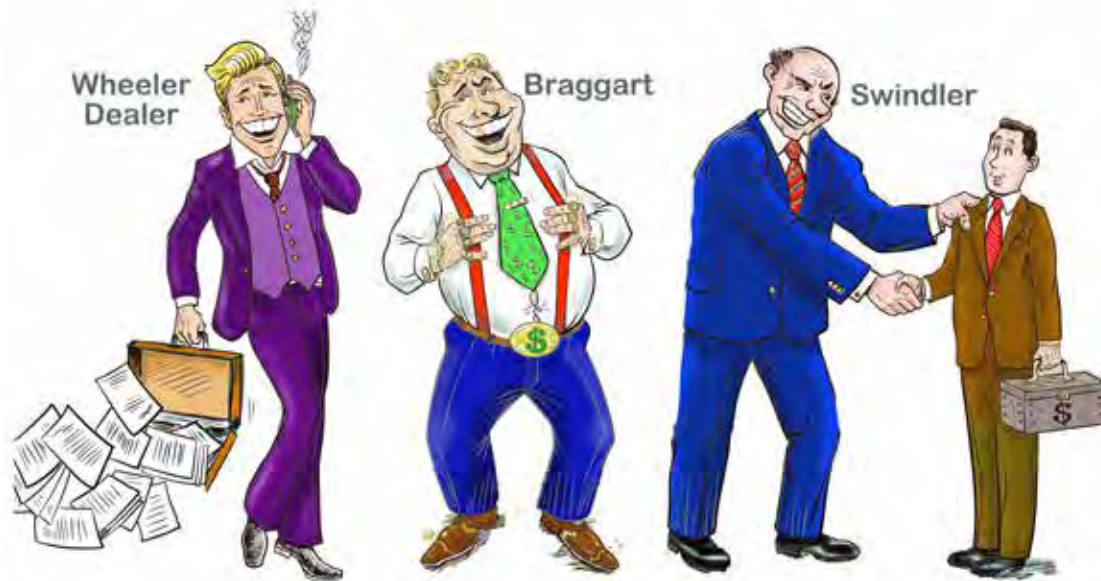

Nine examples of COVER ILLUSTRATIONS we did for online 'Copper' magazine. Every two weeks. We're almost at the 200 issue mark!

Grafting

When branches of two different trees touch each other, merge, and continue to grow, they have formed a natural graft. The two fused trees can share nutrients, minerals, and other resources. Seeing this, early people learned to use grafting on agricultural plants as long ago as 300 BC. Most woody plants can be grafted or fused, but the tion of several. When a third plant is added between two others to become a trunk it is called an inter-venor. Building is another method of grafting in which the stem is a single bud rather than a piece of stem or twig. Building forms a stronger union, is faster and, often, more successful, than any other grafting technique. Because only a single bud processes are labor intensive and require skill. The technique is used only in orchard and horticulture, or penology efforts. It will provide a much better advantage over more common propagation techniques. Grafting is a form of cloning. A graft is performed when a stem is inserted into the lower portion of a tree. The stem becomes the top of the plant and the tender stock becomes the root system or part of the trunk. Although grafting usually refers to joining only two plants, it may be a combina-is inserted, it is possible to produce several new plants even when stem wood of a new variety is scarce. Grafting is done in the spring using a sharp knife. Fresh, green cambium cells need to be exposed on both the stem and rootstock for the graft to be successful. Both the rootstock and the stem are cut in longer and grower fashion so that they interlock. This allows the cambium cells to contact each other on at least two points. Grafted trees have consistent and

Ethyl Alcohol made from Apples

While no form of alcohol is good for us (except alcohol is used for disinfection and methyl alcohol is used for dissolving other substances), humans have a long history of ingesting ethyl alcohol as a recreational drug. Ethyl alcohol alters mood and behavior. However, and dentists usually make it from grains or other parts of plant matter with high sugar contents. The human liver usually can filter ethyl alcohol from the body, but it is more when consumed faster than the liver can metabolize it. Like methyl alcohol, ethyl alcohol can be used as an industrial solvent and as a fuel additive. Ethyl alcohol is naturally produced when airborne yeast cells fall into apple juice. These microscopic fungi feed on the fruit sugars while the juice. With a ready supply of nutrients, the yeast population grows, and even more ethyl alcohol is produced. When all the sugar is consumed, the yeast become dormant, and the alcohol concentration in the now "hard" cider is about 5 percent. Hard cider, apple wine, apple brandy, and applejack are all apple-based beverages which contain ethyl alcohol. They differ in the methods used to arrive at their alcohol percentages.

Hard apple cider made with freshly pressed, unpasteurized apple juice is sweet and tart, and sometimes sugar, and the consumer is sealed. As the centuries pass, the yeast consume the added sugar and/or the naturally occurring sugar in the apple juice and give off carbon dioxide as a part of their respiration process. Once the sugar is gone, the yeast run its longer make energy, so they go dormant. This fermentation process results in an elevated alcohol content of 3-5%. If the hard cider is re-fermented with more sugar, or infused with carbon dioxide, it will be effervescent (carbonated).
