BIO:

Alvin Perry has been setting Texas ablaze, one comedy stage at a time, and he's got the whole country in stitches. After his first gig, he was hooked. Born and raised in San Antonio, Texas, Alvin's early life was a wild ride, with no clue how to be funny and two prison stints under his belt. But in March 2012, comedy found him, and the laughter was like a drug. After his third prison stint, Alvin came back with a vengeance, determined to make comedy work. He'd tried everything else, so it was do or die. Alvin performed on every stage that would have him, finally landing gigs opening for Kountry Wayne and T. K. Kirkland. As a felon with a newborn and two jobs, Alvin almost threw in the towel, but his friends kept him going, tossing him comedy gigs like lifelines.

After becoming a part of The Loud Pack, a crew of comedians who were probably tired of being serious all the time, Alvin's career started to take off. His social media following grew like a weed, and he was going viral faster than a cat playing the piano. In 2023, Alvin got the chance to perform in Hollywood and open for Esau McGraw, because who wouldn't want to open for a guy with a name that cool? Over the years, he's opened for comedy legends like Damon Williams, Melanie Comarcho, Scrunchy, D'Lai, Jay Philips, and more, because when you're hot, you're hot. He's also shared the stage with up-and-coming comedians like Desi Alexander, Bubba Dub, Tim Bae, Bryson Brown, and others, because you've got to keep the comedy pipeline flowing. In 2024, Alvin's career really took off, with opportunities pouring in from all over the country. He was flying more than a bird on Red Bull, and after years of winning local comedy competitions, he was nominated and won Best Comedian in San Antonio, because the people have spoken. Oh, and he was the first black comedian to win, which is kind of a big deal. That same year, he took a leap of faith and quit his day job to pursue comedy full-time, because when you're on a roll, you've got to keep rolling. Alvin is also the owner and creator of the Professional Asshole brand, which is either a brilliant marketing move or a cry for help. He's been selling his merch since 2018, because who doesn't love a good t-shirt?
