Ways to Use These Writing Prompts

There are so many fun ways you can make the most of this freebie over the summer! Here are a few ideas:

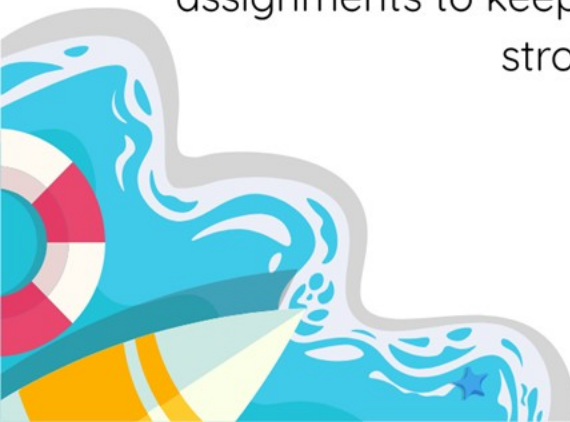

Summer Journals – Encourage students to keep a writing journal and use the prompts to reflect on their summer adventures.

Pen Pal Fun – Have students write letters or postcards using the prompts and send them to friends, family, or even classmates.

Creative Story Challenges – Host a weekly writing challenge where students use a prompt to craft short stories, then share them in a summer writing club or online classroom.

Drama & Acting – Let students turn their writing into mini skits or dialogues, bringing their stories to life.

You can send these prompts home in summer packets, use them in tutoring sessions, or even as optional fun assignments to keep students engaged and ready for a strong start in the fall!

If I Were a Popsicle...

If you were a popsicle on a hot summer day, what flavor would you be? Where would you melt the fastest? What if you could talk? Would you hide from the sun or jump into someone's cooler? Let kids run wild with sensory details and silly scenarios.

My Pet Went on Vacation Without Me

Imagine waking up to find a postcard from your pet—turns out they went on vacation without you! Where did they go? What adventures did they have? Did they miss you... or were they too busy surfing and eating tacos?

(No pet? No problem—substitute with a stuffed animal, imaginary creature, or favorite toy!)

The Day My Sandcastle Came to Life

You've built the most amazing sandcastle ever... and then it talks! What does it say? Does it want to explore the beach, throw a party, or battle incoming waves? What adventures await you?

Ice Cream Shop Mystery

There's a sneaky mystery at the local ice cream shop. New flavors keep disappearing before the grand opening. Who—or what—is behind it? Create a short mystery story with a kid detective, a clever pet, or even a talking ice cream sprinkle.

A Letter from Camp I'll Never Forget

Whether real or imagined, camp is full of wild and wonderful possibilities. Write a letter from a camper to someone back home describing the weirdest or funniest day they've had so far. Maybe a raccoon stole their lunch, or their counselor turned into a frog—get creative!
