

Lubna of Cordoba

*"I did not seek the throne, nor crave the spotlight.
My world was ink and numbers, quiet rooms and patient hands.*

*My strength was in the work no one saw,
the corrections, the translations, the care for knowledge itself.*

You carry that same quiet power.

How will you use your quiet dedication to shape the story only you can tell?"

Reflect:

1. Think about a time when you learned or grew through subtle guidance or behind-the-scenes support rather than public teaching or leadership. What did that teach you about the power of quiet service?
2. If Lubna's dedication landed her in the king's court, what does what you are dedicated to in life say about where you are headed?
3. What does "ruling the margins" mean to you? Is there a quiet place in your life where you're shaping meaning? Are you happy with what you're creating there? Most importantly, do you think your Lord is happy with what you are creating there?
4. Lubna's life emphasises influence through precision, care, and dedication rather than overt power. How can you cultivate influence through mastery and service rather than authority?

Nothing ever begins in the middle.
It begins at
the margins,
in the hands
of the one who traces the frame.

Be the margin ruler.
