MOBILE PHONE THROWING

The majority of people in the world would do whatever it takes to prevent the gadgets in their possession from getting broken, often treating them as a prized object. 5.1. And yet, at the same time, there are the mild-mannered and responsible people from Finland, who have adopted a very different approach. They have created an unofficial national sport called 'mobile phone throwing'. 5.2. In all seriousness, the Mobile Phone Throwing World Championships have been held since 2000. The small town of Scavonlinna has been attracting greater numbers of contestants ever since. Astonishingly, competitions are no longer restricted to Scavonlinna 5.3. I guess this comes as good news for anyone who can't get enough of the sport because it means they are happy to travel to see the next round!

So, what's the attraction? Well, if you need to show your frustration with an aging device, it provides a great opportunity to pitch your throwing abilities alongside other 'athletes'. You might be worried about the environmental impact of leaving hundreds of discarded mobile phones lying in the grass. 5.4. It is their job not only to clear the area, but to also find ways of recycling the discarded mobiles. Phones are often kept by the organisers so that they can be thrown again at some point in the future. Now, like more established international sports, mobile phone throwing comes with its own set of rules. There is a wide selection of phones to choose from should you wish to avoid throwing your own. There is also a designated throwing area, which means you can be disqualified if you cross a line marked on the ground while throwing. A panel of judges has the final say on who threw their phone the farthest, but that's basically it. So, is there a prize for the winner? 5.5. Most likely, you'll end up taking it with you the following year to see if you can break your own record by throwing it an inch farther!

- A. Rest assured that every competition is attended by employees from toxic waste disposal companies.
- B. Thousands and thousands from all over the world congregate here for a chance to be the phone throwing champion.
- C. Of course, you not only have a chance to boast about your achievement, you'll also walk away with a brand new phone.
- D. For that reason they find themselves spending huge sums on protective cases and screen covers.
- E. Now, before you shake your head and stop reading any further, you need to realise that this is not an April Fool's.
- F. The sport has now spread to different parts of Finland, and, recently, it has also started catching on in cities across Europe.
