Congresswoman Jasmine Crockett

Per Webby

Congresswoman Jasmine Crockett has become a bold and galvanizing force for justice, equity, and civic engagement. Through her dynamic use of digital platforms, she has sparked national conversations and mobilized action around some of today's most urgent issues—including voting rights, racial equity, and housing access. With a commanding online voice, she bridges policy and people, ensuring that every post, moment, and soundbite fuels change.

In 2024, Crockett introduced impactful legislation like the Combating the Housing Supply Shortage Act and the HIRE CREDIT Act, addressing systemic inequality head-on. Her viral exchange with Rep. Nancy Mace in 2025 further underscored her ability to speak truth to power in real time, igniting online discourse and reinforcing her position as a fearless advocate for accountability and equity.

For her unwavering leadership, legislative impact, and her strategic use of digital platforms to inspire political action and empower underserved communities, we are honored to present Congresswoman Jasmine Crockett with the 2025 Webby Advocate of the Year Award.

For those of you with a short memory...

I think all of us would strongly agree that if anyone has really earned the title of firebrand, it is Congresswoman Jasmine Crockett.

At the other end of the spectrum you will find someone whose only claim to fame is being insulting, someone I have awarded the nickname of Emptee Gee. Her attack on the Pope, saying "evil is being defeated by the hand of God" is clear proof that her heart is as cold and empty as her head.

In the world of "it is never going to happen," the Catholic Church is calling on Congress to censure her.

"It is obvious that Greene's remark about God defeating 'evil' was aimed at the Holy Father," the Catholic League President William Donohue wrote in a letter to the committee.

In his letter, Donohue said if Greene “wants to make reasoned criticisms of Pope Francis, she has every right to do so. But no sitting member of Congress has the right to denigrate the leader of a world religion.”

“To allow her to continue to smear Catholicism reflects badly on the Congress. Therefore, I am asking that Republicans and Democrats come together to censure Marjorie Taylor Greene for her bigoted remarks,” Donohue said.

Another so-called MAGA “influencer” a Dr. Gina, says the Pope may very well be in Hell. Who do I report her to for very anti-Christian activities?

How will Lil Marco, who is a Catholic, respond to these attacks? I was born a Lutheran, we claim the right of being the first Protestants to the Catholic Church. While we may have disagreements in our views, attacking the Pope is a pathetic and desperate attempt at fame, likes, clicks...

What is wrong with these people? Why are they so afraid of, or are they incapable of, showing any compassion for those less fortunate? Unless there is something in it for them, some way for them to profit, then you must be woke, pushing that DEI crap.

Pete Hegseth disclosing top secret plans information to his wife and a friend on another Signal chatroom has many people calling for his resignation and replacement. The top question seems to be will it take someone getting killed, or just seriously injured, before the weekend host is replaced?

How did he get access to Signal? He setup an UNSECURED internet line into his office in the Pentagon!

My question is how long will it be before Pete bans the wonderful movie “Hidden Figures?” from viewing by the military? Three Black women were doing math in their heads that a whole room of white boys couldn't comprehend!

And they got a lot of exercise walking a half-mile to the “colored” bathroom!

Can we please bring back General Charles Q Brown Jr as then next Secretary of Defense?

I want to watch Stevie Boot-Liquor have a stroke...

Didn't someone campaign that Putin was so scared of him that he would basically retreat in terror

On Day One???

Aren't we almost at Day 100??

In another example of the competency of the administration, our Secretary of Homeland Security had her purse stolen, and I think she lied about the $3,000 in cash as a distraction for all the lost identification, including but not limited to her driver's license, medication(?), apartment keys, passport, DHS access badge, makeup bag, blank checks, and about $3,000 in cash.

Until Kristie NoMama shows us her receipt, I don't believe she had that much cash on her. I think she lied because it allowed her to completely change the narrative from "I was stupid! to let someone steal my purse while the Secret Service guarded me" to "look at how much I was going to spend on my family and friends at Easter."

For those of you who have never seen Boston Legal, it is worth a watch as it tracks politics from 2004 including a highschool principal who wants to block Fox News. The reason I bring it up is in one episode a lawyer is talking to a junior lawyer about an upcoming trial. She tells her that you have to make the jury feel the client's pain.

Most ATM's limit you to $3,000 so that is feasible.

Most of us pay for dining out on a credit card, we want those points. Why pay for dinner in cash unless you are a DA in Georgia? Can anyone think of a reason for her to carry thirty $100 bills, or was it sixty fifties?

Then, while she is protected by Secret Service, nobody noticed a man with a facemask come in and sit in a chair directly behind her? This didn't trigger any alarm, If the restaurant didn't have metal detectors, he easily could have been armed. Sloppy!

Nobody noticed him using his foot to move her Gucci purse, from under her seat to his, and then pick it up and exit the building???

And they wonder if it was a lapse in her security?

So now, instead of people talking about how stupid she looks, letting her purse get stolen right out from under her chair, we get to "share" her family gathering, Easter no less, that was destroyed by a purse thief.

Our Secretary of Homeland Security cannot even manage to keep ahold of her purse, and we trust her to protect our homeland? LOL!

I wonder if she was perhaps targeted by Russians or Chinese operatives who now have not only a lot of her personal information, but can analyze her DHS access badge.

And it just keeps getting worse for her and her clowns!

According to Hermosillo's girlfriend, Grace Hernandez, Hermosillo has learning disabilities and can only write his name. Hermosillo said he did not graduate from high school and dropped out after the 10th grade.

I have read (or have had read to me) the foregoing statement consisting of ? pages. I affirm that the answers attributed to me herein are true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief and that this statement is a full, true, and correct record of my questioning by the above-named officer of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. I have initialized each page of this statement (and the corrections noted on page(s) _____).

Here is the latest in the list of her ICE Agents incompetency's. Are they just plain cruel and incompetent liars or is it because they have a quota to meet?

Shouldn't there be at least a 1 in the red circle. Since there is no number, a jury should see that as a zero, right, if the number of pages is left blank? That indicates that no pages were read to him, right?

The officer also signed the document, which said Hermosillo "read" the document or had it read to him. But Hermosillo said no one read him the document.

Other documents "created" by the officer have inaccuracies. For example, the criminal complaint says that Hermosillo was detained "at or near Nogales, Arizona." But Hermosillo was detained in Tucson, which is more than 70 miles from Nogales. John Mennell, a spokesperson for the U.S. Border Patrol, said that it was an unintentional error.

To be clear, Hermosillo is a US citizen. He asked the ICE Agents for help.

Kristie NoMama should immediately issue Hermosillo a written apology, followed up by firing any and all of the agents who lied. She should then have them criminally prosecuted for any and all of their criminal acts, including, I believe, falsifying official government documents as well as potential kidnapping charges.

Ok, OK, I know she won't do anything, neither will Pam Blondi, she is to busy terrorizing transgender youth in her latest vendetta. I would still encourage Hermosillo to file a civil suit because let's face it, his basic civil rights were violated and then the ICE agents lied again and again to protect their own asses.

Lets see his side: He had been transported to the hospital via ambulance after suffering a seizure. He had just been released when he walked up to the ICE Agents and asked for help.

That means:

1. Calling an ambulance usually involves calling 911, recorded of course, date, time, location...
2. There is the testimony and the logs from the ambulance crew that transported him to the hospital.

3. There is the testimony from the hospital staff, the nurses and doctors, X-rays, scans, all of those pesky patient records showing his admittance time, his treatment, and his discharge time...

Add in the log of the ICE Agents assignment that day, any GPS on their vehicle, their cell phones, body cams.. and the jury should take just a few minutes to decide how all of that is not an "unintentional error?"

Were they just trying to meet a quota and were so far behind that anyone who even looks illegal is illegal unless they can prove it? Democrats do not want to let criminals into this country, we want them out as much as any RedHat, but we want to make sure their civil rights are protected as much as yours are.

Act I: The Favor of Fools

Setting: El Labrador, the "Freedom Fortress" Hotel Bar, dusk outside, neon warm inside.

Maria Bizzarra-Rama stirred her third drink with the little plastic sword she'd swiped from a diplomat's fruit tray. She leaned back in her barstool, one stiletto heel kicked out, wine-red lipstick smudged in the shape of a crooked grin.

Across from her sat Greg Gutless, slouching with his hands wrapped around a glass of sparkling water like it was his last tether to Earth.

“So,” Maria drawled, gesturing with the sword, “we flew halfway across the world, nearly got strip-searched at the airport, and what do we get from the great Kingdom of El Labrador?”

Greg adjusted his tie, which was visibly too tight. “A polite but firm ‘no interview, no cameras, no questions,’ and a pamphlet about how the prisons are revolutionary.”

Maria drained her glass and slammed it on the bar. “I’ll tell you what’s revolutionary: room-temperature wine in a country with no winter.” She motioned to the bartender. “Another. And one for Greg. He needs to stop sweating like a Sunday school teacher in a biker bar.”

Before the drinks could arrive, two off-duty prison guards slid onto the barstools beside them. One was tall and rail-thin, eyes sunken and tired; the other stockier, with thick forearms and a nervous twitch in his left eye. Their names were Javier and Luis, both still wearing boots flecked with prison yard dust.

“Americans?” Javier asked in Spanish-accented English. “You were the ones from Faux Noticiosa?”

Maria smiled. “That’s us. He’s Greg Gutless. I’m the Bizzarra-Rama.” She extended a hand, which Javier shook. Luis nodded nervously.

“You want to know what it’s like in there?” Javier asked.

Maria raised an eyebrow. “I’d kill to know.”

Javier and Luis glanced around, then leaned in.

“We want to quit,” Luis muttered. “But if you quit the fortress... they make sure you go in instead. Everyone knows it.”

Greg perked up. “Wait, are you saying you’ve seen...”

Javier cut him off. “I’ve seen men go blind from the lights. I’ve seen them faint in chains, left on the floor for hours, no food, no water. Men with missing fingers who don’t remember how they lost them. They strip your humanity before they strip your clothes.”

Greg turned slightly green. Maria leaned forward, fascinated.

“Go on.”

Luis lit a cigarette with shaking hands. "There's one man... they call him the mule. He was arrested just for having a phone with Signal installed. They made him sleep standing up for a week. Every night they blast music so loud your teeth vibrate. Then silence. Then screaming. Then silence again."

Greg stood suddenly. "Excuse me," he choked, and stumbled to the bathroom.

Maria sipped her wine. "Don't mind him. He just realized reality has teeth."

Javier looked over his shoulder. "Look. You really want to know what's happening? We can get you in. One of you."

Maria's eyes sparkled. "I like you boys."

Luis leaned forward. "It has to be tomorrow. Sunrise. We'll be on gate detail. You'll be dressed like one of us. Just act like you're hungover and don't speak. If they ask your name, say 'Ramirez.'"

Maria nodded solemnly. "And you'll get them out?"

Luis didn't answer.

Greg returned from the bathroom, wiping his mouth with a napkin.

Maria smiled. "Greggy! You're in luck. We have a way in. You!"

Greg blanched. "Me?"

Maria stood and draped her arm around him. "It has to be you. You're... forgettable. That's a compliment, dear. Plus, Grump will love it. He'll call you brave. You might even get your own desk!"

"I—I don't know—what if I get stuck?"

Maria whispered, "Greg. History is made by men who wet themselves a little and go anyway."

Greg looked at her, then at the guards, then at the bottle of wine on the bar. He sighed.

"Fine. But if I die, I'm haunting you."

To be continued on Monday...

Have a GREAT WOKE WEEKEND!!!

The 1797 Treaty of Tripoli

Begun by George Washington, signed by John Adams and ratified unanimously by a Senate still half-filled with signers of the Constitution, this treaty announced firmly and flatly to the world that "the Government of the United States of America is not, in any sense, founded on the Christian religion."
