Just like many toddlers, Riah was seeking to gain her independence.

This included feeding herself, learning how to play with toys on her own, imitating mommy mixing and stirring in bowls and pots while playing in her toddler kitchen.

She loved getting praise for putting her dirty diapers in the trash and getting her own shoes when it was time to go outside and play (even though she would put on rainboots on a sunny day).

Waking up that morning, mommy gathered Riah, went to the bathroom, and started their morning routine. They started by brushing their teeth...although Riah did not like mommy to be fumbling around in her mouth. She wanted to brush her own teeth. Riah really liked the sweet strawberry flavor of kids' toothpaste. "Brush, don't swallow, spit." She brushed some more, then spit and rinsed with water. A small amount of kiddy mouthwash went "swoosh, swoosh, swoosh."
