FROM ROUTINE TO RADIANCE: REIGNITING DESIRE AND CONNECTION

By Evguenia Cheinis, MA, RP
Sex & Relationship Therapist, Founder of Unleash Synergy

Many assume that passion naturally fades over time and that long-term relationships inevitably lose their spark.

But Evguenia Cheinis, a sex and relationship therapist, challenges that belief. According to Evguenia, desire isn't fixed — it's a skill that can be nurtured and cultivated.

Whether single, partnered, or exploring nontraditional relationship dynamics, Evguenia explains that erotic energy can be one of the most powerful resources for vitality, confidence, and joy. Yet stress, shame, and the monotony of daily life often pull people away from their sensual selves.

"The key to reigniting pleasure isn't about being more sexual — it's about being more present," Evguenia notes. By slowing down, breathing, and tuning into sensations, people can reconnect with their natural rhythm of desire. For couples, this may mean sharing needs and fantasies with curiosity rather than fear or pressure.

For singles, it can involve deepening self-pleasure practices and building confidence from within.

In her upcoming workshops, Evguenia will share strategies designed to help participants reconnect with their bodies, and erotic potential. Energy Orgasms (October 17, 8:45 PM) guides participants through breath, sound, and movement to awaken confidence and erotic energy — even without touch. Relationship Spice (October 18, 5:00 PM) explores what keeps passion alive long-term, including playful fantasy, erotic communication, and nurturing emotional safety in partnerships.

"Pleasure isn't just about sex," Evguenia emphasizes. "It is about connection, presence, and feeling fully alive in your body."
