

Set Sail for the Future: Give Children Who Have Never Seen the Sea a Taste of the Horizon

Every child deserves to dream big. Yet for thousands of children from disadvantaged backgrounds, the horizon is often limited. Our association has a simple and powerful mission: to use the Mediterranean as a wonderful playground for learning and discovery.

We take these young people on board, offering them much more than just a trip out to sea. It is a total immersion that allows them to:

- * Discover marine fauna and flora (ecological awareness).
- * Learn the basics of navigation (responsibility and team spirit).
- * Gain self-confidence and independence (personal growth).

In short: we transform isolation into openness, and doubt into boldness.

Why Become a Patron of Our Adventure?

Your company has the power to put a smile on these children's faces.

By choosing to fund our association, you are not just making a donation: you are investing in people and the future.

A typical day on board: account of an unforgettable sea trip with Pulpo Azul

Introduction: rendezvous with the sea

It is 9:00 a.m. and the Mediterranean sun is beginning to warm the harbour. The excitement is palpable among the children who join us: they are about to leave dry land behind to enjoy a unique day of exploration. At Pulpo Azul, our trips are not just boat trips, but educational expeditions designed to transform wonder into commitment.

9:30 a.m.: Briefing and sailors for a day

The welcome: The captain and instructors welcome the crew for the day. It's time to hand out life jackets and address the first essential point: safety on board.

The mission: After the safety briefing, we move on to the 'mission of the day.' With the help of a large map, we define the area of exploration (for example, a Posidonia meadow or a beach to clean). We give the children a logbook to write down their observations.

Eco-friendly instructions: Important reminder: we do not carry single-use plastics and we observe wildlife without ever getting too close.

10:00 am: Cast off!

The engine purrs softly (slowly, out of respect for the environment!) and we leave the port. It's time to keep your eyes peeled.

The navigation course: The instructor takes the opportunity to explain maritime weather, the importance of buoys and the function of the rudder. Under supervision, the children can learn the basics of steering.

Initial observations: We often take an initial reading of the water: its temperature, colour and salinity index. We use simple tools to make science more concrete.

11:00 a.m.: At the heart of the ecosystem

We arrive at the planned study area. The engine is turned off. It is time for silence and observation.

The secrets of seagrass beds: If we are close to the coast, we drop anchor on a sandy bottom away from the seagrass beds. Using a mask allows us to show the vital importance of Posidonia, the “lungs of the Mediterranean”. Children discover the small fish and starfish that hide there.

The cetacean event: It's the long-awaited moment! The encounter with dolphins, thanks to the fishermen who collaborate by giving us their positions, is an opportunity to learn how to identify the species and their vulnerability to human activities. Amazement leads to protection.

12:30 p.m.: Lunch break and discussion.

Zero-waste picnic: we bring our food in reusable lunch boxes. It is an enjoyable moment that reinforces the message: we can enjoy ourselves without leaving a trace.

Debate about the sea: during lunch, we take stock of the morning's observations. It's an opportunity to discuss: ‘What would you do to reduce plastic pollution?’ or ‘How can you help a dolphin in danger?’ The children become protagonists, rather than mere spectators.

2:00 p.m.: From theory to action

Fishing for waste: if we find floating waste, we organise a small safe collection operation. This gives concrete meaning to the fight against plastic pollution (the subject of our previous article!). Each piece collected is recorded and classified in the logbook.

2:30 p.m.: Return to port and review

The boat sets off on its return journey to port. It's time to fill in the last page of the logbook.

The 'Blue Captain' diploma: each child receives a small 'diploma' certifying their active participation and commitment to protecting the Mediterranean.

The message on land: we encourage the children to share their discoveries and the protective measures they have learned with their families and friends. The mission continues on dry land.

Conclusion: more than an excursion, a vocation

A day with Pulpo Azul is a complete sensory and educational experience. It reminds us that the Mediterranean is not a backdrop, but a valuable ecosystem for which we are all responsible.

Pulpo Azul

- Our Ambassador of the Seas: The Capelli 9.5m RIB
- To accompany our young explorers towards the horizon, Pulpo Azul has chosen a trusted partner: our 9.5-metre Capelli RIB, powered by a powerful 350 horsepower engine. This is not just a boat, it is a real tool for wonder and safety.
- Designed for robustness and performance, our Capelli offers the ideal platform for our sea trips:
- Optimal Safety: Its semi-rigid design guarantees exceptional stability, even in rough seas, providing a reassuring sense of safety for children and their carers. High freeboards and numerous attachment points ensure that everyone stays safe on board.
- Comfort and Space: At 9.5 metres long, it offers generous and well-designed space to accommodate our groups of children in the best possible conditions. Everyone can enjoy the view, take part in workshops or simply relax in complete comfort.
- Speed and Agility: The 350hp engine allows us to quickly reach our exploration areas, optimising the time spent discovering marine wildlife, learning the basics of navigation or enjoying safe swimming. Its agility is an asset for navigating along the coast and discovering hidden corners.

Reliability for adventure: choosing a RIB means choosing a reliable boat that can handle the challenges of the Mediterranean, ensuring that every trip is a carefree and enjoyable experience.
