VACANZE ROMANE 1950

P.60 L.115 H.90

Mini kitchen with strong references to the style of the 1950s.

The soapbox doors and Tiffany color bring back an old style typical of the beginning of the economic boom. It is named after the famous film Roman Holiday, which was filmed in the same building on Via Margutta where the kitchens are displayed. Polished steel shell handles, square windows, and a white Carrara marble top reinforce the concept of the past while giving it an antique flavor.

Materials: Carrara marble, laquered plywood

INDUSTRIALE 2000

P.70 L.120 H.95

A true design project essential in its metal core yet sophisticated in its stylish details, such as the elegant steel side grill. Hard to downgrade it to the role of a mini kitchen. It is a cult object that, for example, can be placed next to a chester in a New York style loft to become the main element of a room, giving that touch of industrial design rare to find in today's modern kitchens.

There was a desire to strengthen and make the design realistic by inserting star gate valves with pressure gauges, the structure is made of iron girders. The stainless steel side mesh makes the kitchen elegant. The retro style refrigerator, microwave oven, coffee machine are well inserted in the appropriate spaces.

Materials: wood, oven-painted galvanized iron

CARBONIO 2040

P.60 L.125 H.95

Small and compact kitchen designed in the future. The design idea stems from an internal explosion. Volumetric elements break away from the supporting structure by placing themselves at different distances from each other. The appearance of suspension gives it a dynamic, almost unstable image. The material contrast of the volumes painted with metallic colors and the transparent plexiglass volume containing the coffee machine confirms its innovative volumetric composition.

This small kitchen is a composition in which the elements seem to detach themselves from the load-bearing base in an ethereal suspension: the result is a dynamic image as of planets in motion.

Materials: iron, carbon, corian
