CONDUCT & EXECUTION

The salient features governing our conduct and execution of Traffic Control Marshalls are enumerated below:-

Traffic Control Marshalls.

One of the most important jobs in any workplace, such as a building site or loading bay, is a traffic Marshalls. A traffic Marshall is the person who is in charge of directing the movements of large vehicles on a work site, particularly large cranes during loading and unloading. A traffic Marshall will be the eyes and ears of the crane or truck driver and make sure any manoeuvres they make are safe and don't put the driver or anyone else in danger. The Marshall communicates with the driver via a radio link or pre-arranged hand signals. By doing this the Marshall can inform the driver of what is going on around the vehicle since they may not have a complete view or clear visibility. A traffic Marshall can also be called upon for many other duties such as directing traffic in and around the site.

Need for traffic control Marshalls: Traffic control Marshalls are required to manage the traffic in and out of the site, be helpful to the public as they are the first point of call for visitor and contractors entering and leaving the site. As well as deaths and injuries, there can be significant and costly damage to vehicles and other on-site equipment in an uncontrolled environment. A traffic Marshall has the important responsibility of trying to ensure these accidents don't happen. The other side of this is that being a Marshall can be an extremely rewarding job, one which repays training with giving any individual a fulfilling, rewarding and satisfying role in the workplace.

With training and qualifications, a Marshall can be vital in a number of different working environments. Places such as building sites, for instance, which often have large vehicles, trucks, diggers and cranes all in one relatively enclosed space need a good Marshall to take control and direct vehicle operations.

Services therefore training forms the core backbone of our organization and we lay extreme importance to the training of our Guards. We have a full fledged Training Department comprised of carefully selected Training Executives under senior training
