AMP'D UP PERFORMANCE

SCIENCE MEETS STAGECRAFT

Our brains are still wired for survival, making collaboration, feedback, and action feel hard. Evelina helps your people spot when to override those instincts and when to trust them, so teams amp up their performance, without burning out.

- Remote work appeals to our need for safety, but isolation drains performance and satisfaction. Your team will learn to intentionally balance both for results and fulfilment. "Connection is the Wi-Fi of high performance. It's invisible but essential."
- We're wired to react to circumstances. Your people will learn to manage mood deliberately and create contagious momentum. "Your mood is contagious. Make sure you're spreading something worth catching."
- High performers use their real strengths boldly instead of waiting for permission. Your people will learn how to go beyond defined roles to unlock impact. "We need to see our job description as a starting point, not a ceiling - or you risk stunting your own growth and job satisfaction".
- Protecting our ego feels natural, but growth requires vulnerability. Your team will learn to welcome feedback as a competitive advantage. "Great performers crave feedback like it's oxygen."

Evelina brings a unique approach to the stage: she's a performance psychologist who integrates live instruments and vocals into her keynotes.

Music activates the brain's emotional and memory centres, making learning stick and application effortless.

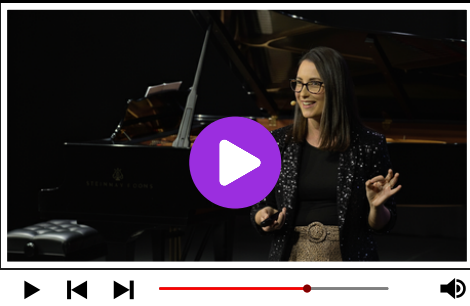

The result is a keynote that's dynamic, unforgettable, and designed for real-world performance gains.
